Category:Geographic coordinate systems Category:NavigationLonjin, South Australia Lonjin is a town and a locality in the Mid North of South Australia. It is located on the Great Northern Highway. The traditional owners of the area are the Ngaanyatjarra. The area was first settled by Europeans after the Surveyor General of South Australia established the township in 1877. The township was gazetted in 1912 and renamed, the name being a combination of the words "longhunna" and "jin" in the Ngaanyatjarra language meaning "fishing place". The name is due to Lonko fishing nearby. The town's name is derived from the Aboriginal word "lonk", meaning "jumping" or "boundary". Lonjin Post Office opened on 1 April 1884 and closed in 1967. When a person is in a stressful situation that triggers a fight or flight response, that person may temporarily lose the ability to think. However, this temporary loss of reason — this absence of conscious awareness — doesn't mean the person is incapable of reasoning, and it may be possible to help them reason once their subconscious brain has had time to kick in. "If we can get to those first few seconds before a violent encounter, we might be able to
