From the output of the utility, it lists the serial number and is an unformatted, human-readable string. The advanced glycation end-product receptor (RAGE) and its ligands in normal and diabetic retinas. The role of advanced glycation end-products (AGEs) and their cognate receptor (RAGE) in the pathogenesis of retinopathy and other complications of diabetes has been well documented. In a previous study we found that both RAGE and its ligands, amyloid β ($A\beta$) and β -galactose-modified proteins (AGEs), are expressed in the retina. In the present study we determined the tissue distribution of RAGE and AGEs in normal and diabetic retinas, and investigated the temporal and spatial relationship of these compounds using immunohistochemistry, immunoprecipitation, Western blot, and AGE fluorescence staining. Immunohistochemical analysis showed that RAGE was expressed on the surface of blood vessels in the retinas of normal and diabetic rats, and in the ganglion cells of the retina. Immunoprecipitation assays demonstrated that $A\beta$ was bound to RAGE in retinas from normal and diabetic rats, suggesting that RAGE is an important receptor for $A\beta$ in the retina. $A\beta$ colocalized with RAGE on blood vessels in the retinas of both normal and diabetic rats. The fluorescence staining intensity of AGEs was significantly increased in the retinas of diabetic rats. The immunoprecipitation of retinas from normal and diabetic rats revealed that AGEs were bound to RAGE. The fluorescence staining intensity of AGEs was significantly increased in diabetic rat retinas and correlated with the severity of retinopathy. These results 4bc0debe42
