Serological evidence of Hantavirus infection among residents and rural workers in the Amazon region, Colombia. An outbreak of Hantavirus cardiopulmonary syndrome in the Colombian Amazon Region was reported in 1994. Although routine screening of blood donors is common in the region, there was no serological evidence of past or recent Hantavirus infection prior to the onset of the outbreak. To further evaluate Hantavirus infection in this area, a questionnaire was developed to assess exposure to hantavirus-infected rodents among residents and rural workers. Logistic regression showed that only two of 47 covariates (prior diagnosis of kidney disease and reporting of rat sightings in the past three years) were associated with seropositivity. In the final model, workers who reported sightings of rats in the past three years had an odds ratio (OR) of 2.4 (95% CI, 1.0-5.7) of being Hantavirus-seropositive compared to workers who had never seen rats. The study also identified a potential new reservoir, dogs, in the region. Q: Issue with WPF custom control I'm creating a custom control using custom-control-designer.cs.
